

Opening Keynote!

TV personality and Mechanical Engineer, Dr. Amy Elliot

“I just love working hands on with things and I love fixing things.” I think that’s probably my motivation is I really just love taking something that is broken, figuring out what’s wrong with it and then fixing it and have it work. I just really really enjoy that.”

Monday January 22nd at 11:00 am

Dr. Elliot joined Oak Ridge National Lab in 2013, and today leads the Robotics and Intelligent Systems group.

She gained fame in 2013 on “The Big Brain Theory” on Discovery Channel, finishing second out of ten. Since 2015, she’s contributed to “Outrageous Acts of Science” on the Science Channel.

In March, she was featured as a 3D-printed statue at the Smithsonian for the “#IfThenSheCan” exhibit during Women’s History Month.

She holds four patents with over 15 pending.

Amy Elliott and Alison Wong, the two female contestants from The Big Brain Theory.
